“ I have very nice memories of Jeff not only from high school, but also from working with him at Anderson Hospital. No matter what kind of mood I was in, Jeff always had a way of making me smile. He had recently reached out to me on my birthday; he always said he was "good" and never wanted anyone to fuss over him. He will be missed greatly. I hope the memories of him will make you smile as well and bring peace to your family.

“ My deepest sympathies to Jeff's family. Jeff was an beautiful human being. He was one of my main partners on the Ambulance Service in Highland and we always learned something new each time we went out...mostly that we didn't like getting up in the middle of the night! RIP Jeff. May the good lord give you peace now and wrap his arms around your family as they remember you and their memories of you.

“ Jeff was the nurse on my first orientation flight. August 2009. Back in the day of paper testing and real interviews. Before getting offered a position we had to get an orientation flight to make sure we could handle being in the air. Jeff greeted me when I got there. Davey Davis was the medic and Mike Deets the pilot. Guess ARCH wanted to make sure I REALLY wanted this job with that crew combination!! Lol! We caught a simple transfer. Nothing exciting, but I got to fly. During the down time, Deets had bought a brand new motorcycle. He had pulled it up to side of hanger to polish and clean up from ride to work. Jeff and Davey had brought in old, dirty motor oil. When Deets wasn't looking they poured the dirty oil under Deets bike to make it look like it had an oil leak. These two really planned and executed this joke perfectly. Jeff and Davey were laughing so hard they were almost in tears pouring this oil by his bike. I watched in awe of how funny these two were. Deets came back out to find the puddle. He was so mad he started calling the dealership about his new bike leaking oil, dirty oil at that. Jeff and Davey finally came clean about the prank and Deets laughed so hard, apologizing to the dealership! They got Deets really good that day. I loved every minute of it! It was a great experience all around from the moment I hit the door, to the epic pranks. I knew this was a place I wanted to work from that moment on! Jeff was that experience and I will never forget it. I tell all the new hires, “ let me tell you about my first day...” Jeff will forever be remembered.
